

Handwritten markings, possibly remnants of text or a diagram, located on the left side of the strip. The markings are faint and difficult to decipher, but appear to include some vertical lines and a small, dark, triangular shape.

Handwritten text in a cursive script, likely Mongolian or Tibetan, written on aged, yellowed paper. The text is arranged in approximately 15 horizontal lines. Several lines begin with characters written in red ink, serving as section markers or initial letters. The script is dense and characteristic of historical East Asian manuscripts.
